DEUTSCHLAND AGAIN SAFELY REACHES AMERICAN PORT

GERMAN SUBMARINE ARRIVES ON SECOND TRIP TO THE UNITED STATES.

New London, Conn., Nov. 1.—The German submarine Deutschland arrived in the harbor here early this morning.

Captain Koenig said the Deutschland left Bremen on October 10 and made the trip without special incident. The crew comprises 25 men. The Deutschland appeared in the outer harbor shortly after midnight and proceeded to the dock of the Eastern Forwarding Company.

Captain Hinsch, of the Forwarding company, accompanied by Dr. R. E. Black, the health officer, and other officials, met the submersible on a tug. The usual quarantine regulations were waived and the Deutschland tied up at the dock near the North German Lloyd steamer Willehad.

The Deutschland was said to have a large cargo of chemicals.

The Deutschland first attracted world-wide attention when almost the same hour in the morning of July 9 she slipped in the Virginia capes.

More Yielding.

And now comes the announcement that two American censors, army officers, on duty at Sayville and Siasconset, have been summarily removed at the request of the allies, because they permitted news to be circulated in this country originating at Berlin, and delivered over the wireless telegraph system maintained by Germany, which was displeasing to them. It is not always wise to jump at a conclusion, and perhaps there are reasons for yielding to the demands of the allied governments which have not been made public, but judging things on the surface, it must be admitted that the spectacle is humiliating. When the war broke out Great Britain not only took control of the seven seas and the world's commerce and intercommunication, but also took control of the submarine avenues of communication. The cables to Germany were cut and no news reached this country that was not censored by the British authorities. No one will be foolish enough to claim that the British censors did not suppress facts, and distort and exaggerate the news. Germany protested, but in vain. If now Germany, under great difficulties and expense, sends news to this country that is not always exactly accurate, it does not seem right that she should be silenced and shut out.

London, Nov. 1.—British casualties reported in October in all war areas are: Officers, 4331; men, 102,702.

October losses of 107,033 bring up the total British casualties for the four months of the Somme offensive to 414,202. The daily average loss for October is 3452.

The British figures are of especial interest on account of their bearing on the controversy between London and Berlin regarding the losses of the allies on the Somme. Several of the statements in October from the German war office dwell on the sacrifices of the British and French to obtain a comparatively small amount of territory. It was said that they made desperate efforts to break through the German lines, hurling great bodies of troops and sustaining enormous losses. On one occasion the British war office denied such a statement from Berlin.

A Sleepy Time Story That Is Both Interesting and Instructive.

DISCOVERY OF TREE PRUNING.

How a Wise and Hungry Old Animal Performed a Good Deed and at the Same Time Acquired a Square Meal.
Interesting Items For Small People.

I am going to tell you tonight, said Uncle Ben to Polly Ann and little Ned, a story about

THE WISE DONKEY.

There was once a farmer who had a donkey, and, like most people who own donkeys, his master did not have a great deal of respect for his wisdom. One day the donkey showed him that he knew a great deal more than he was given credit for. At any rate, after this occasion the farmer thought him far wiser than a whole forest full of owls, who have ever been regarded as the wisest of feathered folk. But to begin at the beginning:

The hero of this tale—the donkey—was very hungry. His master, thinking him only a donkey, thought he did not know the difference between eating prickly thistles and something better. The donkey was very tired of thistles, and his stomach felt like the "old scratch" because of them. He gave a loud bray and before he got to the end of it—not farther than b-b-r, in fact—he saw the gate into the orchard was open. The donkey had always longed to go into this forbidden place, but the gate had been kept securely locked. His master could not lock the smell of the apples and pears from reaching the donkey's nose, though, and this smell made the donkey long more and more after the good things which grew there.

The donkey could scarcely believe his eyes or nose either, but the second glance showed him that his eyes had not deceived him. The gate was open; consequently the donkey was invited into the orchard. Once inside, he lost no time in sampling the fruit of a fine apple tree. You know how fond your pet pony is of a nice juicy apple. Well, you can imagine how a donkey who had been raised on thistles would regard a tree full of them. He ate and ate until no pig would have recognized him. Branch after branch came off the tree in Mr. Donkey's attempt to get the delicious apples. All went well until his master returned. When he saw what the donkey had done, poor donkey got the worst whipping that he had ever received in his life. The master almost cried, for his tree was ruined, and the apples were the finest ones he owned.

The year following, what was his surprise to see that the tree he had looked upon as ruined bore double as many apples as any other tree in the orchard. Besides this, the apples were finer and larger than any he had ever grown. He was ashamed of the way he had treated the donkey for his part in the scheme. He gathered a large basket of the apples and himself carried it to the poor donkey. Ever after this the farmer pruned all the trees in the orchard, and from so stupid an animal as a donkey the valuable process of pruning trees was discovered.

CURE SWEET POTATOES FOR HIGH PRICE TIME.

Successful storage of sweet potatoes requires conditions somewhat different from those necessary for the storage of other root crops. The potatoes need to be mature and free from dirt, bruises and breaks in the skin.

Dig the crop when the soil is dry and allow the potatoes to remain on the ground in the sun for a few hours but never leave them out during the night. Pick up in baskets, and haul to the place of storage without removing from these baskets. Do not use sacks for containers, as they allow many of the potatoes to be broken and bruised. At the place of storage sort the potatoes and grade by removing the very small ones and all that are broken or cut.

When large quantities are to be stored a specially constructed storage house is well worth the expense. Almost any outbuilding, however, can be used successfully. Nail strips over the cracks so as to make the building fairly tight. Near the center of the room put in a small stove that will hold fire well, to heat the room.

For a room of ordinary size, two or three doors, 10 to 18 inches, near the top and the same number near the bottom of the room will provide the proper ventilation. These should be fixed so that they will open and close easily and tightly.

Some use bushel crates made of slats to hold the potatoes and stack them one on top of the other. Others prefer to make small slatted bins. The object is to secure a thorough circulation of air through the potatoes. The bins should be made so that they will be three or four inches from the floor and the same distance from the walls of the building. Two by fours nailed to the floor and walls give good ventilating space. The slats are easily nailed to these, leaving about an inch space between each. The most successful bins are not more than five feet square and four or five feet deep.

Before placing the potatoes in the house, open all the ventilators, build a fire and dry the house out thoroughly. Place the potatoes carefully in the bins so as to prevent bruising. During the first ten or fifteen days leave all the ventilators open and keep the temperature between 85 and 95 degrees Fahrenheit. It will be necessary to have a thermometer in the storage house. The constant circulation of this warm air will leave the potatoes perfectly dry. The heat should now be discontinued and some of the ventilators closed. Keep the temperature between 55 and 60 degrees if possible. This can be controlled to a large extent by ventilation. If the weather is warm keep the ventilators closed during the day and open at night. If the weather is cold, close them at night and open them during the warm part of the day. If it becomes damp in the storehouse dry out for a few hours with a little fire, closing the bottom ventilators and leaving the top ones open.

If the storehouse is being used the second time it should be disinfected before the potatoes are placed in it. Either a good coat of ordinary white-wash or a spray made of one pint of formalin to 30 gallons of water will be effective.—Leonard G. Herron, Extension Horticulturist, Mississippi A. & M. College.

A WOMAN DIVER.

Aviation Is Too Risky, So She Merely Sinks.

ONCE AN EXPERT AVIATRIX.

She Learned the Trade in the West and Now Applies It East to the Tune of From $20 to $50 a Day—She Dives to Lay Pipes.

At Black Tom, N. J., where the serious explosion occurred a few weeks ago which shook three states, Mrs. Alga Bryant was recently hired to dive for the thousands of allied shells which went to the bottom of the bay when munition, scows and ships burned and sank. Seriously disturbed by the fate of her husband, who met a horrible death when his aeroplane, high in the air, got beyond his control and dashed to the earth, Mrs. Bryant gave up aeroplaning, at which she was an expert, and took up the "less risky" employment of diving. She is only twenty-six, yet has crowded into her young life more adventure than any girl of her acquaintance. At diving she earns from $20 to $50 a day, which she says is part of the attraction of the job, though she likes the work itself best. Captain Fitch, the well known western diver, taught Mrs. Bryant her new occupation. Her first work was at Seattle, Wash., where she was for three months laying pipes in the bay. The shells she is now removing from the water bottom are worth about $25 apiece.

Fur Combinations.

From present indications two kinds of fur will be combined in many of the coats next winter. So if you have an old fur coat in fair condition or a collar or muff save it and see what your furrier can do in using the good parts of the old garments for trimming a new fur coat.

Frozen Peaches.

Peel and slice one dozen fine ripe peaches, sweeten generously, put them into the freezer with the unbeaten whites of three eggs, pack in ice and salt and freeze.

To Keep Lettuce.

Lettuce can be kept fresh in this manner: Cut leaves from stalks, wash and shake lightly; then lay loosely in deep pan, putting another pan over it to fit closely, but do not crush leaves. Put in cool place. It will keep crisp for forty-eight hours. You can use part of it and cover the rest up again.

says Mrs. Sylvania Woods, of Clifton Mills, Ky., in writing of her experience with Cardui, the woman's tonic. She says further: "Before I began to use Cardui, my back and head would hurt so bad, I thought the pain would kill me. I was hardly able to do any of my housework. After taking three bottles of Cardui, I began to feel like a new woman. I soon gained 35 pounds, and now, I do all my housework, as well as run a big water mill."
